Carpenter Street Closing Protested

There was a feeling of suppressed excitement in and about the city hall, where the board of trustess met last Tuesday evening. Quite a crowd was present because of anticipated interest in the proceedings.

The piece de resistance was the Flanders Nelson controversy over the abandonment of the southern end of Carpenter street in southeast Carmel, which closing was favorably voted upon at a previous meeting of the board, This previous action has resulted in the filing of a witten protest by F. W. Nelson, owner of the Paradise Park tract, which follows:

362 Euclid Ave.
Oakland, Cal.,
March 30, 1923

To the Honorable Board of Trustees of the City of Carmel,

Gentlemen: It may not be possible for me to attend your meeting on April 3, owing to grave illness of Mrs. Nelson. but I desire to make still more emphatic my protest (sent you previously by letter and by wire) against the proposed closing and abandoning (with no alternative arrangement) of over 1000 feet of the southern part of Carpenter street, and which is the sole and only street giving access to over 1000 feet of frontage of my tract.

Such an act would do me very great injury, financially and otherwise. Besides depriving me of all ingress and egress to and from any of this frontage, it makes impossible any plan for improving or subdividing it, or even selling it; practically confiscating its value to anyone except the owner of Carpenter street and the land westward. I protest also because I believe such an act would be to set up a dangerous precedent, in that it would set the seal of official approval upon the injury done to one property owner for the benefit not of Carmel generally but of one private citizen.

I protest against any discrimination in any manner between the two owners of property bordering this part of said street, and against the granting of any special privileges or advantages.

I protest against the acceptance or use by your honorable body of the proposed so-called "Indemnity Bond" or defense fund of $10,000 or any other amount said to have been offered you by a private citizen, whether to influence your decision or act or acts, or to defend and protect this board or the city of Carmel against any proceedings which I may undertake to obtain justice and legal redress for this wrong, or for injury of any sort which may accrue to me or to my interests through any act of your body.

Mr. Flanders told us early in January, when he made an unsuccessful attempt to enter into negotiations with us, that he had already taken title to that end of Carpenter street and that he had traded a portion of his holdings near 11th avenue in lieu thereof. He said that the planning commission figured that a bridge on Carpenter street would be costly, and that therefore the street was to be abandoned in his favor. (The fact is, we are since informed, no such thing had occured, and the planning commission did not recommend that the street be merely abandoned, but that it be shifted, if feasible, a short distance east-

"Hassan"--Study of Forest Theater Play

By John Northern Hilliard

YASMIN

By James Elroy Flecker

(This poem is from Flecker's play "Hassan"

How splendid in the morning glows the lily: with what grace he throws
His supplication to the rose: do roses nod the head, Yasmin?

But when the silver dope descends I find the little flower of friends
Whose very name that sweetly ends I say when I have said, Yasmin.

The morning light is clear and cold: I dare not in that light behold
A whiter light, a deeper gold, a glory too far shed, Yasmin.

But when the deep red eye of day is level with the lone highway,
And some to Meccah turn to pray, and I toward thy bed, Yasmin;

Or when the wind beneath the moon is drifting like a soul aswoon,
And harping planets talk love's tune with milky wing outspread, Yasmin,

Shower down thy love, O burning bright! For one night or the other night
Will come the Gardener in white, and gathered flowers are dead, Yasmin.

AS a writer of poetry, the late James Elroy Flecker won before his untimely death in 1915, a reputation that is enviable. As a playwright he is now coming into his own. His one printed play, "Hassan," which is the story of a confectioner of Bagdad and how he came to make the golden journey to Samarkand, is rapidly becoming the sensation of two continents.

The New York "Times" calls "Hassan" a "powerful play." The Boston "Transcript" gives it a column of almost superlative praise. The Philadelphia "Public Ledger" says that it is "a simple, but powerfully written play that can hardly be properly reviewed. It has to be read and reread to be appreciated. It is a wonderfully contrived plot, with Oriental setting and characters that include the central figure, a caliph, his vizier, the Beggar King, jesters, poets and two women.

Emotions Run Riot

"Pathos, tragedy, comedy, all interspersed in a way that indicates a master hand. Philosophy, humor, irony and inimitable touches that brand the author as being a close student of the riddle of the universe, woman. The soul of poets mingling with the material desires of worldly men—all are incorporated within the plot of 'Hassan.'"

Summary of the Plot

Here is the "Ledger's" excellent summary of the plot:

The plot of the piece hinges around Hassan, Bagdad confectioner, and well along in years, who is smitten on Yasmin, a widow of questionable repute, with a "neck that is a pillar of marble of Yoonistann, eyes like two sapphires in two pools; lips, two rubies drenched with blood—and like the desert, waiting for the rain—born for passion."

Singing 'neath her window his song of love, Hassan learns that his erstwhile friend, Selim, has stolen Yasmin away. They appear on the balcony in each other's arms. Hassan swoons.

Then enters the caliph upon the scene. Haroun-al-Raschid, accompanied by Mashur, his executioner; Ishak, his minstrel, and Jafar, his vizier, is seeking adventure in the pale hours of dawn.

The plot moves quickly and, in due course, Hassan finds himself the rescuer of the caliph, against whom the Beggar host is plotting. As a reward he is made second only to the vizier in the caliph's household.

Rafi, the Beggar King, is captured. His "army" is slain. Bagdad is saved.

The central plot begins with Rafi's trial before the caliph. It develops that the Beggar King's hatred for Haroun was caused by the kidnaping of Pervaneh, Rafi's mountain lover. Rafi hearing of her departure for the caliph's palace, vows to burn Bagdad and destroy the caliph if necessary to effect her release.

The caliph decides to give the two their choice, of death together by horrible torture, or life; Pervaneh to become the caliph's legal wife and Rafi to depart from the kingdom, never to return. They are to be given a day together to decide. If they choose death they are to be given "one day of love, from sunset tonight to sunset tomorrow, unfettered and alone."

Rafi and Pervaneh choose the latter. And Ishak and Hassan spy upon the lovers to "listen to debate more weighty than the talk of kings," the debate of love and life.

Needless to say, it is Rafi who weakens. But, eventually, both he and Pervaneh decide 'tis best to die after their day of love than to live separated and with memories of "what might have been."

Hassan passes out again, to be called back to life by Ishak, who finds him even as he found him before. Together they decide to "leave the city of slaves—to write no more in praise of kings."

The two join a caravan en route to Samarak and, hoping to find along the barren road "the voice of the emptiness of earth."

A London Verdict

The "London Spectator" devotes a page and a half of a recent issue to Flecker's play. Here is the opening paragraph:

"At last Flecker's long-expected play has been given to the world; but not, alas; on a stage and among the tangible but subtle allurements of a theatre, for it has slipped into the world as a book, liable therefore to be judged by standards the most inapplicable to it—those of the library and the study. This is not to say that, however judged, 'Hassan' could appear a bad piece of work, but rather that its extraordinary and remarkable virtues may remain undetected. There have been so many literary plays, so much fine writing, so many tirades flung pell-mell on to the boards. But here is a play with a great deal of verse in it not above the reach of the Christmas pantomime lyric writer, which is, nevertheless, a true instrument for the theatre. It is a play in which the peculiarities of the stage as a medium have been felt with delicacy and exploited with audacity."

Non-Production in London Regretted

The "London Spectator" commends Flecker's literary executors for their reluctance to give "Hassan" to the world save by the stage. "But at this point in the play's history," adds the authoritative London weekly "its non-appearance on the boards has become a scandal.

"The lack of wisdom with which the stage of toda is governed is beyond belief. The fear of failure has become, with producers, an obsession which has driven them far beyond reach of artistic feeling or even of common sense. The contemplation of the delay in 'Hassan' is made bitter to those who have any personal knowledge of the London stage by the thought that it is now impossible that Mr. Claude Lovat Fraser should undertake the dressing and setting of the piece. For in the limpid yet magnificent 'decor' which he would have given it, the swiftness, delicacy and the simple and obvious gusto of the play would have been given their full value. For on the stage, if it is properly produced and acted, 'Hassan' should have all the obvious charm of a 'Chu Chin Chow' as well as the real and dignified attraction of a work of art of masterly simplicity. Both these aspects of its merit might easily be buried in the upholstery of too lavish a production, even though visible luxury is an integral factor in the emotional situation."

Flecker Book Obtainable

Readers of the Pine Cone, who are looking forward to the Forest Theater production of "Hassan," may be interested to learn that an English critic, Douglas Goldring, has just published an appreciative book on Flecker. The volume contains a number of unpublished letters that show something of Flecker's charm and generally display the man. Fresh as many readers will be from a perusal of the play, the allusions to "Hassan" will be of rather special interest. He writes to Mr. Goldring:

"A drama is a thing now that is worth writing! I have had most encouraging letters about my work in that direction from Drinkwater. * * * But I hope that Granville Barker and no other will take up 'Hassan,' my Oriental play. It may interest you to know that 'Yasmin' is out of my play, was written for it—and also 'the Golden Journey to Samarkand' is nothing but the final scene. The epilogue is the last scene of 'Hassan'—or, rather, I wrote 'Hassan' to lead up to the epilogue. * * If it doesn't give the public shivers down the back when it is acted in its place I'll never write again."

Interesting Talk on Mystic Thibet

A representative audience enjoyed an interesting stereopticon lecture on "To the Thibetan Border," by Rev. Robt. F. Fitch, Wednesday evening, March 28th, under the auspices of the Carmel Missionary society at the Carmel church.

Rev. Fitch is president-elect of Hangchow Christian college, has been a missioner in the orient for many years, and the fact that eminent scientists have asked for a repetition of the address speaks volumes for the value and interest of the material and his manner of presentation.

The lecture deals with an age-old though little known land of marvelous beauty, and reminds one that the missionary has been and is the pioneer in research work, even at the risk of his life,

The social feature proved refreshing for all.

While the whole missionary society co operated whole heartedly, the success of the occasion was due largely to the untiring efferts of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Butcher, the latter being in charge of the March program, and Mr. and Mrs. Geo F. Beardsley, Mr. Beardsley furnishing and operating the lantern and Mrs. Beardsley having as vice president been asked to preside.

Church-Wilson

A long loud ring on the Pine Cone's telephone Thursday afternoon was the preliminary to a long-distance call from San Jose.

The message was to the effect that on that day Miss Louise Church, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Church, and Phil Wilson, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Phil Wilson, had been united in the holy bonds of matrimony.

It has long been known that the young couple were interested in each other, but the announcement of the marriage came as a surprise to relatives and friends.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

University Professor Issues Valuable Work

One of the most notable books of the entire contemporary output is a just-published volume by Clarence M. Case, professor of sociology, University of Iowa, which outlines the history of moral resistance of force from the earliest appearance of the phenomenon in human affairs down to the movement led by Mahatma Ghandi in India. It is, its publishers believe, the earliest attempt at anything like an inclusive and thorough treatment of the subject. It will inform and clarify, and probably interpret the thought of great numbers of people who realize today that manifestations of moral resistance are not merely sporadic, and cannot, even in the case of the conscientious objector, be dismissed as "sissyfiedness" or cowardice. It will make clear to any reader that the idea is of great significance not only in the immediate past but at the present time and, as the author believes, quite possibly of immense importance for the future.

"Non-Violent Coercion" follows out the development of the idea of passive or moral resistance against material force, as well as its historical manifestations; it interprets moral and psychological as well as political aspects. Its story extends in time from Lao Tse to the political conscious objectors still at Leavenworth, while its scope is that of world-history. It is a sympathetic but entirely dispassionate, non-partisan and scientific examination of the subject, the inquiry having been begun in preparation of a thesis for a master's degree.

The Bible Made Attractive for Young People

This most discriminating and reverent arrangement of the Bible for young people has been made by Mrs. Joseph B. Gilder on two main principles: The first, elimination; the second, arrangement.

But there has been no re-writing, re-phrasing, except what little was involved in the necessary excisions. The language is the beautiful and statley English of the King James version, already a priceless traditiin of many generations and surely destined, for its great dignity and living power of evocation, to be the permanent heritage of English-speaking peoples.

Who that has read revisions has not missed with a positive pang of disappointment the splendor, the color, the march of words and hint of wonders which that translation achieved? To the most impressionable and sensitive age, Mrs. Gilder's arrangement has left all the grandeur of that noble work.

Only the crudities, the barbarities; the passages unsuitable or incomprehensible have been left out—those which could, for the young, not drop into their proper historical and ethnological perspective. These, and the long genealogies, the endless "begats," which contain no particular moral illumination.

Mrs. Gilder's second task has been to break up chapters and verses into continuous narratives that a child can follow for himself with complete absorption and uninterrupted interest.

CHEMIST THE "CZAR" OF CEMENT MANUFACTURE

High and uniform quality results from his rigid tests and orders.

Every eight seconds, mechanical devices dip into the materials that are traveling through a cement mill and put a sample under lock and key for the chemist to test. Chemists are "the czars" of a cement plant and chemistry is their law.

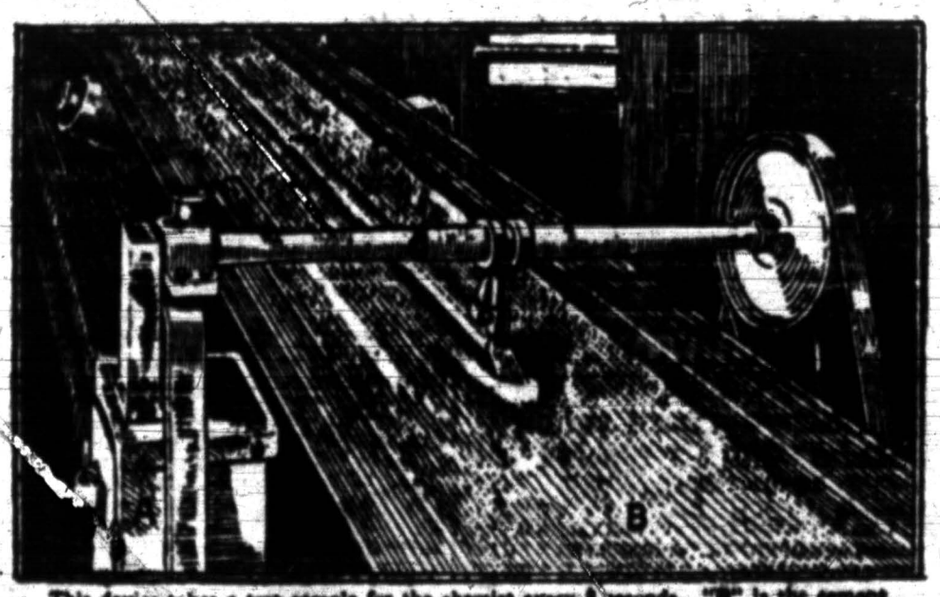
Few factory processes require more care than the making of cement — thousands of test samples being taken in a day's run at a cement plant because cement must be tested in a variety of ways for numerous qualities. It is under the chemist's instructions that workmen proportion the raw materials.

These tests in which the proportions of the elements of cement are determined call for glass-enclosed balances or scales that must be accurate to the ten-thousandth of a gram. There are 454 grams to a pound. Such balances will quickly detect the difference in weight of a piece of paper, before and after you have written your name on it.

The cement mill chemist uses ultra-sensitive balances in determining the proportion of raw materials.

The "rule" of the chemist is seen and felt at every point in the process of cement manufacture—in the quarry or pit where raw materials are obtained—in the departments where raw materials are proportioned, mixed and ground—in the burning department where under intense heat the chemical change takes place—in the department where the raw material which has now become clinker is ground to the fine powder called portland cement.

This country put over thirty million tons of cement making material through these processes last year.



This device takes a test sample for the chemist every 8 seconds. "B" is the scraper on a moving belt, leaving the grinding mills. "C" is a revolving hollow shaft. As the dipper picks up a bit of the flour-like material it is carried through the shaft "C" and deposited in the locked box "A".

International Print Exhibit at Arts & Crafts

The international exhibition of prints shown at the Arts and Crafts Club until April 10th is an artistic appeal to local printmakers to attempt great things.

Delicacy of line and simplicity of detail mark the work from Belgium and England, while vigor and boldness contrast in the American school.

By far the gem of the group for delicacy and masterly touch is The Two Brothers, by Dirk Baksteen, Belgium. He shows the influence of Van Dyke, whose entire collection of etchings was, before the war, in the Plantin Musee at Antwerp, and the pride of Belgium.

Hilda Pemberton, England, has a striking face, The Jester, and Charlotte Lawrenson Montreuil-Sur-Mer, all notes of great beauty of execution.

Rhythmic motion in Percy Smith's Three Scythers reminds one of Steph Haweis' rhythms of the Tahiti oaremen.

Another California etcher, May Gearhart of Pasadena, sent an aquatint, The Old Garden, rich in colors and grouping.

Carl Oscar Borg has a block print of a Hopi maid seated against adobe walls, and Gustave Baumann startles you with Two Strangers from Hopiland, meticulously done in color. They are katchinas, not people.

Senner Cove, Cornwall, by John Platt, Scotland, is charming in tones and drawing, violet and emerald sea with pink sailboats and a bridge trailing through deep waters to a sunny shore near boathouses. He took the Los Angeles gold medal at the International Printmakers' exhibition.

A four-inch square of rich blues and purples by N. V Walp, called Springtime, hold the gem of color prints—iris against the dusk of California night.

Ambrose Patterson's Monterey Cypress in autumn tones, and Margaret Patterson's Swans, in moving pools of a deep, green lake, are strong notes in the color group of block prints.

Depth of drawing, in mellow aquatint, is in The House at Kingston, by Fred Gaines of Canada, and Nelson Dawson, R. A., R. E., England, plays a free hand in Scotch Herring Boats, sea and sky full of wind and movement.

Masterly handling of perspective is seen in Stanley Anderson's The Shop on the Corner, and George T. Plowman's Market Place, Chartres.

As most of these studies are for sale, Carmel is fortunate in being able to select through the discrimination of Cornelius Botke, of the Arts and Crafts.

Special luncheon, dinner and tea parties at the Mission Tea House may be arranged for. Phone 907-W-4. adv.

ECONOMY AT THE EXPENSE OF EFFICIENCY

With the tremendous volume of mail passing through the Carmel postoffice and the woeful lack of clerks allowed by the department to handle it, a serious situation in this important public service confronts the community.

A few months ago, being apprised of the growing population here and the consequent increase of patrons of the Carmel postoffice, the officials authorized the employment of an additional civil service clerk. That helped a whole lot.

Later on, a need for still more assistance, resulted in an order for an examination for another clerk. The examination was held and three candidates qualified—but none were appointed.

Now comes the information that at least until the first of July, through our busiest period, no auxiliary assistants or clerks will be allowed. This applies not only to the clerk recently authorized but to the clerk who was already in service.

This leaves only the postmaster and a single clerk to handle the multifarious details of the office—receiving, distributing and dispatching mail (with always a large amount of re-addressing and forwarding), writing money orders, collecting box rent, postal savings business, making reports, selling stamps, handling heavy parcels, etc., etc.

As one indication of the amount of work saddled upon these two over-worked persons, it may be stated that on Monday of this week twenty-five pouches of mail were received and twenty-three dispatched.

Information is at hand to the effect that this retrenchment policy is going on all over the country, so that we are not especially singled out. The policy works a real hardship on small offices. For instance, take an office where ten clerks are employed; reduce the number by two, and somehow the work will be done. But take an office where but three persons are employed and reduce it to two, it is physically impossible to do the work.

This inadequate, restricted, incompetent and insufficient service rendered by the local postoffice, brought about by limited help, and to make a showing of economy and bring about a questionable and unasked for (by the people) surplus, is a matter for the local chamber of commerce and Congressman A. M. Free to take up and remedy, and that quickly.

The people want service, not a surplus.

Dante Re Meets Accidental Death

One of the well-known characters of these parts for many years, Dante Re, a Swiss was killed last Saturday by being run over by his own motor truck. He had cranked the machine and jumped on the seat, but fell off and under the front wheels, the truck passing lengthwise over his body.

For some years Dante and his brother Giacinto farmed in San Jose canyon, down the coast, then for a couple of years were employed by the city and latterly were in the fuel business.

Dante was a good-natured, hard-working young fellow, the butt of many a jibe because of his name. He will be missed.

The Story of Our States

By JONATHAN BRACE

XXXVI.—NEVADA

NEVADA is a Spanish adjective meaning "snowy," and is taken from the Sierra Nevadas, those lofty mountains which separate the State from California. Most of the history of the state centers in this Western section, near the Sierras, and it is here that all of Nevada's principal cities are located.

The first white man to cross the present state was the Franciscan Monk, Father Gares, who made his way across the deserts to California in 1775. In 1825 Peter S. Ogden of the Hudson's Bay company discovered the Humboldt river, which is sometimes called Ogden river after him.

The next memorable trip across the state was that by Fremont in 1843, when he went to California at the time of the outbreak of the Mexican war. It was this war which in 1848 resulted in Mexico ceding a large area to the United States, of which Nevada was a part. When this was organized into territories, the Territory of Utah extended to California. The Western inhabitants, however, were left to their own resources and accordingly organized their own government. Resenting the attitude of Utah they petitioned to be annexed to California.

In 1859 the Comstock Lode was discovered and Nevada had its own mining boom. Population immediately grew by leaps and bounds and in 1861 Nevada was formed into a separate territory. Later, portions of Utah were added and the lower part of the state was taken from Arizona. Petitions for statehood were made but it was not until 1864 that Nevada became the thirty-sixth state of the Union.

Though Nevada ranks sixth in size with its area of 110,690 square miles, it has the smallest population of any of the 48 states. Between 1800 and 1900 there was a marked decrease in the population due to the falling off of mining industry.

This corner of an apartment living room serves as a guest room, and a very convenient corner it is at times. The day bed pulls out to double its ordinary size and a supply of bedding is folded up inside. Two bed pillows are rolled up inside the end cushion covers which fasten with large snaps down one side. When opened up the desk is a complete little dressing table, with a good-sized mirror, which can be drawn out and set up when one is dressing. Toy's Statements Challenged by Coast Highway Champion

In view of the many statements said to emanate from Harvey M. Toy, chairman of the state highway commission, the following statement written by J. E. Stewart of Cambria, San Luis Obispo county, will be read with much interest:

"Many of the statements which Mr. Toy is reported to have made would, because of their absurdity, pass unnoticed were it not for the official position he holds. The spotlight is on Mr. Toy, and his pronouncements, for this reason, attain a circulation and influence which makes them damaging indeed in the unwarranted conclusions to which they lead the reader.

Consider This Statement

"Consider, for instance, the statement that the San Simeon-Carmel highway 'serves only four persons.' In this dispatch a contractor is charged with having said this, but in repeated interviews which have appeared in the prints, the words have been attributed to Mr. Toy himself.

"The territory served by the San Simeon-Carmel highway embraces that part of the coast of San Luis Obispo and Monterey counties lying between San Luis Obispo and Salinas. The distance is approximately 150 miles. The first 60 miles of this lies in a pocket between San Luis Obispo and San Carpojo creek. This portion has four towns, five voting precincts and 3000 population.

At the Monterey End

"Conditions at the Monterey end of the road, including the towns of Monterey, Pacific Grove and Carmel, are measurably the same. Now, it would be quite interesting indeed to several thousand people living in this territory if Mr. Toy would intimate just who the 'four persons' are whom he has in mind. It is evident that about 3996 others, not in this charmed and restricted circle, are on the outside looking in.

"Mr. Toy refers to 'scattered scenic road projects that did not complete anything.' Nothing, of course, is ever completed until after it has been begun. The San Simeon-Carmel road has been begun. It will also be completed. Most informed Californians have gotten past the point of speaking disparagingly of scenic highways. Mr. Toy, who is reported to be experienced in hotel management, ought to know that one of the most marketable assets the State of California has is its scenic highways. Can the reader imagine what Los Angeles would be without its radial roads? By means of this wonderful system, Los Angeles sells its climate, sells its factory sites, fills and refills its hotels and apartment houses, throngs its beaches and advertises its rare commodities in the most distant corners of the earth.

Who's Seen the Ocean?

"Did the reader ever consider how many millions of our fellow Americans have never seen the ocean? Or have never listened to the sound of a breaker as it curled over on the beach or flung itself undauntedly against an unyielding cliff? Most of our hundred and ten million people live between the Alleghenies and the Sierras, and by far the greater number of them have never seen the ocean. And everyone wants to see it, too; is possessed of an active, keen desire to see it. Most of them, indeed, are determined to see it.

"The auto highway makes it possible for them to do this, and wherever there are good highways along the coast these people are coming in increasing numbers. With good roads, nothing will stop them. The writer, in a trip last year to Crater Lake, saw hundreds such.

Roads as Investments

"Such roads are not to be charged to expense. They are investments. Every dollar so expended comes back. The thousands of tourists thronging such routes leave their dollars at every filling station, hotel, grocery, garage, drugstore and almost every farm-house along the way. Some stay a week, some stay a month and some find homes and stay permanently.

"To cater to such trade, first with good roads and then with all the other things it needs or wants, is now the settled policy of California. And let it be said that the plan of the San Simeon-Carmel highway is designed for this. The sound and matured judgment of many citizens, expressed in years of planning and effort, have gone into the making of it. The people of this commonwealth, at a state-wide election and by overwhelming majority, have decreed it. In that decree the San Simeon-Carmel highway was named specifically. A million and a half of dollars were so set aside, and if the rights and serious interests of so many people were not involved, it would seem a joke for Mr. Toy to speak as this interview reports him, of the San Simeon-Carmel project which 'we have abandoned.' Who are 'We?'

Mr. Toy Take Notice

"Let notice be served on Mr. Toy right now that the San Simeon-Carmel highway will be built. This is the temper of thousands of our people. The people have decreed it, and if Mr. Toy and his commission do not wish to be run over, they had better get out of the way.

"State highway building in California has come to be an enterprise of such magnitude that a very large measure of talent, experience and vision is requisite in the conception and execution of its work. For this man-sized job we must have man-sized men. No toy will answer."

ward, or along our eastern line). This commission of course has no legal statue, no responsibility.

My experience as a practical bridge builder leads me to suggest that all that is needed is an inexpensive culvert, sufficiently large to take care of the storm water in the short creek, and with the grading scraped from Carpenter street make the fill, thus ensuring a solid roadbed at once practical, artistic and inexpensive, no bridge being required.

For many years we have been Carmel taxpayers; we hope to make our home in your city, and we would be sorry to feel that it is the Carmel spirit to so greatly injure one party for the benefit of another.

Again asking that your honorable body take action in accordance with our just protests and requests, I am respectfully yours,

F. W. NELSON

Extract from telegram of protest:

Oakland, April 2—Wife very ill. Unable to attend your meeting. . . . Carpenter street must not be closed. If our protest is ignored, will commence action against the city. (Signed) F. W. NELSON

Notwithstanding the above protests, the board passed a notice of public work to proceed with the vacation of the street. The city will now, if this action is made final, face a long-drawn out suit for damages.

The proposal of the Campfire Girls to plant and maintain the park space about the soldier memorial was accepted. It was decided that down the center space of Ocean avenue a rock barrier be put in, dividing the space, and that five feet on the end of each block be planted to shrubbery.

Jack Beaumont, representing the Del Monte Properties Company, filed with the board a blue print of the Carmel Woods subdivision, soon to be opened. Referred to the city planning commission.

Improvement, in accordance with the specifications for Monte Verde street, was ordered on San Antonio street, between Ocean avenue and Santa Lucia streets.

The board directed City Attorney Argyll Campbell to draft an ordinance providing for levying and collection of business licenses. This will probably be given first reading at the next meeting.

The planning commission was given further time to work out the details of a proposed zoning ordinance.

Some do and some don't—we do—so let us serve you a real dinner, and lots of it. Mission Tea House. adv.

Where outstretched arms of pines of Monterey
Point to emerald pasture lands
Between the dark green wooded hills
While whispering winds old tales of romance spell—
That is Carmel.

II.

Blue morning skies that softly kiss the sea
Where distant sails melt into misty white,
And flower-decked points of distant, jutting lands
Seem beckoning with their pure Elysian light
The weary soul to come and know the place
In which untrammeled, higher spirits dwell—
That is Carmel.

III.

Great fiery ball above a golden sea,
Followed by lights that lift an artist's soul
And fire his genius to the active power
That guides his hand to fix this beauteous whole
Of Nature's splendors; soft rose and amber shades
Toning to ashes for the day's farewell—
That is Carmel.

IV.

Rich, star-decked curtain of the summer night,
Drawn close about the wierdly shadowed hills
And dropping points of diamond lights
Upon the sea, until the beauty fills
The soul with awe, and from the silence comes a voice,
"The Heavens for ever more His glories tell"—
That is Carmel.

Three Years to Reach the Top

H. H. Van Loan has now reached the point where a story bearing his name brings a price of $5000 and a percentage of the profits. He no longer has to "peddle" his manuscripts, for producers come to him to buy stories before they are written. But that fact doesn't tell the story of his struggles to reach that goal.

Three years ago he broke away from his job as a newspaper reporter in New York City, with a capital of only numerous plots and ideas gleaned from his ten years of experience in that work. For a solid year he labored almost penniless until Thomas Ince, the noted producer, asked for an interview with him. Thereafter his fortune was made.

"I don't see why more fiction writers do not go into the moving picture game. There is much more money in it. Last year I made $35,000." He gave this statement not as a boast but as an encouragement to the many who are inclined to give up the struggle after trying it for a mere six months.

Companion of "R. L. S." Dead

Donat, who spun weird tales of the native lore of the South Sea Islands for his friend, Robert Louis Stevenson, is dead. He was well advanced in years but his exact age was unknown.

Donat was temporarily in charge of the government administration of the Paumotu islands when Stevenson arrived at Fakarava, and he and the famous author became close, life-long friends. Stevenson would sit by the hour and listen to the tales of ghosts as told by Donat; tales of how, on a certain night each year, ghosts of the natives of the long ago would gather in the Haamuta valley to sing and dance to the music of ancient flutes.

Stevenson's great, black eyes would glisten with excitement while he listened to these tales, Donat said. Speaking of Stevenson, Donat said before his death on February 28 last: "Ah, that was a fine man; so kind, so gentle, so gracious to everybody. He was a true democrat."

Donat, in relating to a correspondent the life led by Stevenson at Fakarava, painted an intimate word picture of the noted author. Stevenson, he said, would ramble along the beach and through the cocoanut groves, clad only in pajamas, barefooted and a great woven pandanus leaf hat on his head. He held kindly intercourse with the natives, whom he compared with the gods of Greece, and each evening celebrated the close of a happy day with a bottle of champagne.

When Stevenson was aboard the Casco, ready to sail for the mainland, he gave Donat a diamond ring of great value. Donat said he refused to accept this souvenir of their friendship, asking for something of no great price, saying he would treasure it to the end of his days. As Stevenson's ship passed over the western horizon, Donat stood on the shore, holding a ring of no great monetary value, which he treasured to the day of his death as a gift from the great writer.

Old Bonaparte Home Sold

The old Bonaparte house in Baltimore, built for the occupancy of Jerome Bonaparte and his bride, Elizabeth Patterson, was lately vacated by the widow of Charles J. Bonaparte and furnishings which were not desired in a new residence were sold at auction. Among the goods were a number of old books, one a worn and tattered volume dated 1803, and bearing the name "Eliza Patterson" on its flyleaf. It was entitled "The Guardian," but the name of the author was suppressed for the reason here given: "These papers, which are distinguished by the mark of a hand, were written by a gentleman who had obliged the world with productions too sublime to admit that the author of them should receive any addition to his reputation from such loose, occasional thoughts as do make up these little treatises, for which reason his name shall be concealed." How different from today when as soon as a literary celebrity dies, all his trivial and careless writings and things he would rather not have said are dragged out of their forgotten pigeon-holes and put into print!

She Must Be Immobile

PARIS.—Music hall managers met recently to debate the interesting topic, "When is a nude indecent?"

The answer is: "When she moves or talks."

The nudity question was brought to a crisis by recent events on the Parisian stage and by the artists' ball two weeks ago at which some of the models fox-trotted all night clad only in slippers.

Fearing that such episodes would start deplorable gossip about Parisian life, the music hall magnates got together to agree on some form of self-regulations. They decided they must reach an understanding on how much stage nakedness should be permitted, what constitutes indecency and what kind of nudity is aesthetic.

After due consideration they agreed that if the nudes remain posed "immobile," and refrain from talking and singing—then they are aesthetic and artistic.

An order was issued that when girls appear behind the footlights in their birthday suits they must stand like statues.

Ministry of interior officials declared they did not intend to hand down a formal ruling on how much nudity is legal, but they would prosecute each case on its respective demerits.

Beggar of Bagdad Will Deserve the Glad Hand

John B. Jordan returned from Oakland on Thursday. On his way down he stopped at San Jose to take in the rehearsal of the Newberry-Cator light opera, "The Beggar of Bagdad. Fine progress is being made in the production, with the cast and large chorus working in splendid harmony. Such headway has been made that should the show have to go on at once instead of the month-end, it would be ready.

Already a large number of Carmelites have arranged to attend one or both performances.

The Manzanita theater here is to open next week under the management of the proprietor of the Iris theater in Pacific Grove. On next Wednesday and Thursday nights Harold Lloyd in "Dr. Jack" is the screen offering.
